Additional Data Built by D. ^{N.} Alley Sr. for his son who occupied it during the days, 1840-1860, when Jefferson was the head of navigation on the Red River. It was at this period a city of some 18,000 to 20,000 people and a place of importance. The Doric order across the front is in good scale and except for the two awkward chimneys on the gable end it is a pleasing one-story place.
